AT A GLANCE

Overview

A Cumulus Brokerage Account is a self-directed investment account held through Cumulus Investment Services, LLC, a registered broker-dealer and SEC-registered investment adviser. Clients direct their own trading in equities, exchange-traded funds, mutual funds, options, and fixed-income securities, supported by research, fundamental data, and a licensed trading desk. A brokerage account is best suited to investors who are comfortable making their own suitability determinations and who do not require the ongoing fiduciary oversight of a managed advisory program.

Investment products are not FDIC insured, not bank guaranteed, and may lose value. Your Cumulus advisor will discuss your objectives, risk tolerance, and time horizon before recommending an account structure.

SUITABILITY & RISK

Understanding the risks

Investing involves risk, including the possible loss of principal. Equity and equity-like securities are subject to market risk; fixed-income securities are subject to interest-rate, credit, and reinvestment risk; options and margin strategies carry additional risks, including the potential for losses that exceed the amount invested. Suitability depends on your individual circumstances. Review the Cumulus Investment Services, LLC Customer Relationship Summary (Form CRS) and Regulation Best Interest disclosure before opening an account.

COMMON QUESTIONS

Frequently asked questions

What is the difference between a brokerage account and a managed advisory account?

A brokerage account is self-directed: you make your own investment decisions and pay transaction-based commissions. A managed advisory account is discretionary: a Cumulus investment adviser makes and implements decisions on your behalf under a written investment policy, for an asset-based fee. Your Cumulus advisor can explain the suitability of each structure.

How is my account protected?

Securities held at Cumulus Investment Services, LLC are protected by the Securities Investor Protection Corporation (SIPC) up to $500,000 per customer, including $250,000 for cash, in the event of broker-dealer insolvency. SIPC does not protect against market losses. Additional excess-of-SIPC coverage is provided through a commercial carrier up to policy limits.

How are my trades routed?

Consistent with SEC Rule 606 and our duty of best execution, Cumulus routes orders to market centers selected for execution quality, including price improvement, speed, and likelihood of fill. A quarterly order-routing report is available on request.

Will I receive tax reporting?

Yes. Cumulus furnishes IRS Form 1099 Composite (1099-DIV, 1099-INT, 1099-B, 1099-OID) by mid-February each year. Cost-basis information is reported in accordance with the Emergency Economic Stabilization Act of 2008. Consult your tax professional regarding your specific situation.

May I transfer an outside account to Cumulus?

Yes. In-kind transfers are processed through the Automated Customer Account Transfer Service (ACATS) and typically settle in 6–10 business days. Your advisor will review whether securities are transferable and whether any re-registration is required.
